2. The Business Division, through its Transaction Section, handles the marketing of all fish in Shanghai. Daily between two and six or seven a.m. fish are brought into the market and assigned to approximately a hundred jobbers, who take care of selling the fish. The jobbers collect the purchase price and turn it over to the fishermen, who retain the entire amount except for a four percent commission, which is paid to the fish market.* The Business Division also has a Market Balance Section, which is in charge of regulating supplies and providing transport for the fish. The section, when fish prices are low, buys up fish and places them in cold storage; when prices rise, the stored fish are dumped on the market.
3. In the General Affairs Division, the Documents Section handles all official letters and documents. The Miscellaneous Services Section procures furniture, stationery, equipment, and decorations, and takes care of necessary repairs to the market. In the Accounting Division, the Computation Section computes the total commission each day, the Cashier Section receives the money and pays the bills, and the Accounts Section keeps the market accounts.
4. The market receives supplies from various sources: junks from Shenchiamen (122-18, 29-58) and Tinghai (122-06, 30-06) bring in salt-water fish; river fish, crabs, and prawns are brought by train from Soochow and stations along the Nanjing-Shanghai Railroad and from Chiehhsing (120-45, 30-46) and Pinghu (121-02, 30-42) along the Shanghai-Hangchow Railroad; and jellyfish and some salt-water fish are brought by boat from Tsingtao and Ningpo. The total business for one day at the Shanghai Fish Market is between JMT 500,000,000 and JMT 600,000,000.
5. The market is a large place, with adequate anchorage and refrigerator facilities to serve the fishing boats. Among other installations are the following:
 - a. Cold storage house, at 420 Ho Shan (霍山) (Wayside) Road, supplies ice to preserve the catch on fishing boats during hot days. It also sells ice to Shanghai restaurants and rents out cold storage space, the rent being computed in terms of piculs. The cold storage unit is operated by TAN Hsi-sheng (覃喜生), director, a Communist; WANG Shen (王深), accountant, former Nationalist; and a mechanical staff.
 - b. Machine shop connected with the cold storage house, operated by HOU Hsiao-ti (侯小提), SHENG Shao-ting (盛紹庭), and others, all former Nationalists.
